The impact of the measures to reduce the spread of the COVID-19 has placed increased pressure and uncertainty on everyone so it's important to know where to find help and support for our mental health and wellbeing when it is needed. There are services where you can find confidential and trusted support, these include:

Help in a crisis

The following advice is intended for crisis situations which happen only rarely. A mental health crisis is when someone feels their mental health is at breaking point and they need urgent help and support.

If you are concerned that you are, or if you feel that someone else is, in immediate danger call 999. If you are calling for someone else, try to establish the person's, name, contact details and location.

If the crisis is not life-threatening but you are concerned for your own or somebody else's mental health, advise them to call NHS 24 on 111 or speak to their GP. The route into formal mental health services is through a GP surgery. If someone discloses to you that they are already in receipt of support for their own mental health they should be directed to link in with that pre-existing support.

Non-crisis situations

In most instances where mental health concerns are raised it will not be a crisis. If you have, or someone you are in contact with has concerns about mental ill health, a GP should be the first point of contact.

It is understandable in the current pandemic that many people will feel anxious, worried or stressed. For those who are in need of emotional/wellbeing support or who are affected by isolation due to the current COVID-19 circumstance, you might want to look for local voluntary organisation who can offer a regular welfare call or suggest contact with a befriending service.
